Yumiko Chiba Associates is delighted to present an exhibition of work by artists Teppei Kaneuji, and Richard Pettibone.

Known for collages and sculptures made by combining complex images in manifold strata, since 2023 Kaneuji has been engaged in production of the “POOOPOOO” series of objects composed of multilayered mishmashes of miscellaneous imagery, fabricated using cutting-edge technology that allows printing on solid objects with uneven surfaces. In these works, myriad visuals flow into the frame, intersect and intertwine; not only images from works by the likes of Andy Warhol and Marcel Duchamp, but photographs, flyers and other printed matter, children’s scribbles, and fragments of personal images.

American artist Richard Pettibone took images from the work of other artists and produced paintings that faithfully duplicated these on a smaller scale. The diminutive proportions of these lookalikes also made them faithful recreations of the images Pettibone saw in art journals. Perhaps miniaturizing works by masters of modern art also served to position them within his own real life and experiences. Pettibone’s technique of recreating existing images as paintings and reusing them formed the basis of a trend that in the 1980s became known as appropriation art.

Thus Kaneuji and Pettibone can be said to take a common approach to art-making of reinterpreting and dismantling existing images such as works by past painters, before modifying them through the addition of personal experience, endowing them with a different kind of movement or direction.

This exhibition comprises Pettibone’s black-and-white paintings on the themes of Brancusi and Duchamp, and new works in Kaneuji’s “POOOPOOO” series that pay homage to Pettibone’s paintings. Monochrome is the name of the game on this occasion; come see how it plays out in the hands of these two off-beat practitioners.

Artist Statement

“Monochrome Games” refers to abstract games for two players such as chess, Othello, and Go. This “collaboration” began when I noticed the similarities between Pettibone’s works in which he took 20th-century masterpieces, shrunk them, copied them by hand and recomposed them in the manner of building blocks or toys; and my “POOPOPOOO” series, evolving since 2023, in which I take parts also from 20th-century masterpieces, make multilayered collages of them in UV ink on a base made using paint, stickers, spray, tape etc. on materials such as wood, steel or glass, print the result, and repeat the process to create new, painting-like sculptures.

Both Pettibone’s concept and mine trace their lineage at some level to the readymades of Duchamp, and Brancusi’s ideas on sculpture and pedestal, and repetitive forms.

Works by Duchamp and Brancusi were also some of Pettibone’s favorite subjects. From among his works dealing with these artists, I specifically gathered a number that were black and white, and made new pieces for the “POOPOPOOO” series based on the original material for these Pettibone works, and the size and composition of those works.

I suppose my efforts could be described as an attempt, by working exclusively in monochrome, to build a transit network with Duchamp, Brancusi and Pettibone, or a shared game board and pieces, and by using the latest printing techniques and image-gathering methods, produce painting-like sculptures containing new junction points.

I also wonder if the ground revealed by taking Pettibone’s works made using appropriative techniques, and performing further appropriation, might also serve as an individual resistance to, or observation on, the vastness of history and of information, and its processing by AI.

Teppei Kaneuji

* About the “POOPOPOOO” series

The string of “P”s and “O”s start off correctly tracing the steps to make a work, then halfway through, turn into meaningless fiction.

I think of these works not as paintings but sculptures that craft spaces from collage.

Forming temporary units, spaces, histories, groups, values that then scatter and change into other things.

I take what appeared to be a single, closed thing, dismantle it, and seeing the thing itself as material make spaces within its layers to create room for foreign objects and fiction to insinuate themselves.

■Artist Profile

Richard Pettibone (1938 – 2024) was one of the pioneering artists to use appropriation techniques. Pettibone was born in Los Angeles, and first worked with shadow boxes and assemblages, illustrating his interest in craft, construction, and working in miniature scales. In 1964, he created the first of his appropriated pieces, two tiny painted “replicas” of the iconic Campbell’s soup cans by Andy Warhol. By 1965, he had created several “replicas” of paintings by American artists, such as Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein, Ed Ruscha, and others, among them some of the biggest names in Pop Art. Pettibone chose to recreate the work of leading avant-garde artists whose careers were often centered on themes of replication themselves, further lending irony to his work. Pettibone also created both miniature and life-sized sculptural works, including an exact copy of Bicycle Wheel by Marcel Duchamp, and in the 1980s, an entire series of sculptures of varying sizes replicating the most famous works of Constantin Brancusi. In more recent years, Pettibone created paintings based on the covers of poetry books by Ezra Pound, as well as sculptures drawn from the grid compositions of Piet Mondrian. Pettibone straddles the lines of appropriation, Pop, and Conceptual Art, and has received critical attention for decades for the important questions his work raises about authorship, craftsmanship, and the original in art. His work has been exhibited at the Institute for Contemporary Art in Philadelphia, the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Miami, and the Laguna Art Museum in Laguna Beach, CA. Richard Pettibone died in August 2024.

Pettibone’s works are included in prominent collections, including Whitney Museum of American Art, New York; Museum of Modern Art, New York; Detroit Institute of Arts; Museum of Fine Arts Boston; National Gallery of Art (Washington D.C.).

Teppei KANEUJI was born 1978 in Kyoto and lives and works in Kyoto.

In 2001, while attending Kyoto City University of Arts, he studied at Royal College of Art (London) as an exchange student. He graduated with MA in sculpture from Kyoto City University of Arts, where he currently works as the Associate Professor. He collects everyday objects to create sculptures facilitating collage-like methodology, seeking new way of sculptural expression, using various medium such as painting, film and photography. His works has been shown in various domestic and international venues including solo exhibitions “Melting City / Empty Forest” (Yokohama Museum of Art, 2009), “Towering Something (Ullens Center for Contemporary Art, 2013), “Cubed Liquid, Metallic Memory” (Kyoto Art Center, 2014), “Teppei Kaneuji’s ‘ZONES’” (Marugame Genichiro-Inokuma Museum of Contemporary Art, 2016), “Eraser Forest” (21st Century Museum of Contemporary Art, Kanazawa, 2020) and “POOOPOPOO” (Yumiko Chiba Associates, 2023). His works has been used for the covers of numerous books, while he has created stage arts for various plays such as “We Can’t Understand Each Other Like Household Appliances” (Produced by Owl Spot, 2011) and KAAT Kids Program 2015 “Yummy and Fun Play ‘Wakatta-san’s Cookies’”(2015-2016), KYOTO EXPERIMENT 2019 Chelfitsch & Teppei Kaneuji “Eraser Mountain”(2019), Chelfitsch & Teppei Kaneuji “Eraser Forest” (21st Century Museum of Contemporary Art, Kanazawa, 2020).
